"Dixie" Walker was McAleer's choice and it was all figured out beforehand third that if Walker held the opposition down to one or two runs Washington would win. "Dixie" did his part, but his team mates failed to come clean with the necessary batting strength, and therein lies the story of our defeat.

As for the game itself, the fans wen home satisfied that McAleer's brigad had done their best, and there was y kicking. Luck, to some extent, aided th Clevelanders. There was a close decision at the plate, which Umpire Sheridar might have called safe, and which would have tied the score, and then there | Collins.
